HISTORY OF THE 507TH PARACHUTE INFANTRY'S PARTICIPATION IN THE NORMANDY CAMPAIGN

JK

The 507th Parachute Infantry took off from Barkeston Heath and Fulbeck at 2350, 5 June 1944. The regiment flew out to the W coast of the Cotentin Peninsula, turned east between the Channel Islands and made a landfall at 0202 near Baubigny. Flak consisting mostly of 20mm. and MG greeted us at the coast and accompanied us all the way to the DZ. Several Officers and men were hit by flak in the planes and one plane was shot down, fortunately after most of the troops were out of it. The night was fair and clear, the wind about 12 miles per hour. With the exception of two elements, one of which jumped at Montebourg and one S of Carentan, the dispersion was excellent, although it's center was somewhat E of the DZ. Jumping commenced at 0232 and ended at 0312. Jump casualties were insignificant.

The Regiment was preceded by 1/2 hour by it's three Bn. radar teams. Unfortunately it turned out that the DZ was occupied and covered by fire by the Germans so that from the moment of landing they had to fight for their lives. On that account neither Lt. Joseph nor O'Brian of the 1st and 3rd Bns respectively were able to operate their radar machines. Furthermore, Lt. McGill of the 2nd Bn broke both legs on the jump and his second, Lt. Ames, was only able to assemble three men. Among them however was the radar set and it's operator, Sgt. Duff. In spite of the German fire whistling around them, they succeeded in setting this set up at 0220 and operated it until 0300. After that Ames folded up his set and successfully got his men back to Col. Ostberg's position which he reached about 0700. This brilliant feat was largely responsible for the comparatively good jump pattern.

Although the jump pattern was fairly compact it centered on both sides of the Merderet River, the total area was large and adventures of small groups rejoining the regiment are much too numerous to tell here. However, Colonel Millett's story deserves some kind of recognition. Colonel Millett jumped on the DZ and assembled 40 men from "D" Company, led by Captain Tolle. With this force he attacked Amfreville about 1000. Captain Tolle was killed and at 1200 the regimental commander seeing that he was sustaining casualties and making no progress with-drew to a position southeast of Les Laudes, which he organized for defense. The Germans attempted to develop his position that night, but excellent fire discipline was maintained and the Germans remained in ignorance of his exact position. The next day he set up a road block and ambushed a convey of seven trucks. That night the Germans again attacked with a reconnaissance force but still without success. Meanwhile, Colonel Millett got in touch with the Division Command and also with Captain Taylor, who brought in 250 men. Captain Taylor had taken the town of Fresville on the way south, butchering many Germans. Colonel Millett also picked up Captains P. F. Smith, Frank, and Allyn, along with some men so that by the evening of D plus three he was at the head of a force of 425 men. That evening he received an order from Division to fall back to Colonel Timmes' position.

Meanwhile, Colonels Maloney and Ostberg had assembled a force of about 150 men at 305980 and joined General Gavin at Force "A" Headquarters at 0430. This force covered a glider landing and in doing so had a brush with the Germans while trying to secure equipment from the gliders. Some of the equipment was left in the hands of the enemy after the Force had suffered casualties. General Gavin ordered our regiment east to the railroad embankment and south along the railroad to the point where the road to La Fiere crosses the railroad. Here the group halted and reorganized. This march was made in good order and no losses were incurred. It arrived at the reorganization point at about 0600.

Scouts brought back news that the bridge over the Merderet was covered by enemy fire, so General Gavin ordered Colonel Maloney to make a wide encircling movement down the river. To cross near or at Chef du Pont in order to drive the enemy from the La Fiere bridge. Colonel Maloney set out on this mission with about 150 men. Shortly afterwards word was received that the Chef du Pont bridge was clear of the enemy, so the General, taking with him Colonel Ostberg and about 75 men, set out for it by the shortest possible route down the railroad. Captain Dickerson was left in command of the remainder of the high ground above La Fiere with the mission of holding this bridge with a battalion of 505, until such a time as the movement via Chef du Pont succeeded. Stragglers were coming in all the time; so that at 0900 when Colonel Ostberg left for Chef du Pont Captain Dickerson had with him about 300 men.

Colonel Ostberg reached Chef du Pont before Colonel Maloney, having taken a much shorter route. Finding the Germans in possession of the town he promptly drove them out and onto the bridge. Behind the bridge the enemy had some cover but behind that he was exposed to our fire on the causeway over the swamp, and being afraid to run the open causeway he turned to hold the bridge. The enemy force as estimated to be a reinforced platoon, Colonel Ostberg deployed his men, opened fire on the enemy, killed the ones in foxholes on the near side of the bridge, and then found that the enemy on the far side of the bridge was still able to cover the causeway the bridge with fire. Being unable to fire on these men directly, Colonel Ostberg gallantly stepped out on the bridge to rush it; but a burst of machine gun fire hit him in the chest, depriving the regiment of his services for the remainder of the campaign.

Colonel Maloney arrived about this time and he too tried to rush the bridge without success. Colonel Maloney then appointed Captain Creek to command the part of the 507th at the Chef du Pont bridge.

Captain Creek began by fishing Colonel Ostberg out of the swamp. He then occupied the near or east end of the bridge and settled down to a long, bitter, and dangerous combat across the length of the bridge where it was impossible to dispose of the enemy unless you raised your head out of your hole and it was very difficult to raise your head out of your hole without being disposed of yourself. This bloody fight lasted all day. At 1700 Colonel Maloney withdrew under orders, leaving Captain Creek with 34 men. Hardly had Colonel Maloney left when the enemy opened up with heavy and accurate artillery fire that killed or injured 14 of Captain Creek's men in a few minutes. Under cover of their artillery fire a party of 75 to 100 Germans approached to attack on the east bank of the river from Captain Creek's left rear. Captain Creek realized the delicate situation he was in, and prepared to meet the worst. Fortunately, a staff officer from Division arrived in the nick of time. Captain Creek explained the precarious situation to him, and this officer was able to get reinforcements up in time to frighten off the German flank attack which never materialized so that the situation was completely reversed in our favor. By cleverly disposing the reinforcements in his left flank, Captain Creek was able to get some enfilade fire on the German position, killing all except three, who ran away. At nightfall, Captain Creek rushed a platoon over the bridge and followed with the rest of his force. This force held the bridge all night until relieved by the 508 next morning.

While this action was taking place at Chef du Pont, Colonel Timmes had landed south of Colonel Ostberg's position. After he had assembled 30 men he heard the sounds of a fight in the direction of Amfreville which he imagined to be "F" Company's attack on that town. Thinking he could offer a useful diversion with the force he had assembled he proceeded to Amfreville and attacked it from the east. The Germans held the town in force, however, and Colonel Timmes' group made no progress, suffering some casualties. Believing he could do better with
