Mr. Cornelius Ryan
203 E. 48th St.
New York, N.Y.

Dear Mr. Ryan.

Col. Vandervoort my Battalion Commander during World War II has asked that I write to you and give you my recollection of the events that took place on the day of the invasion of Europe, June 6, 1944. Of course I am only too happy to do anything which he requests as we shared some pretty trying experiences and I have nothing but admiration for the Colonel.

I must begin however by apologizing for my very poor memory for names, places etc. My memory of many of the events is very clear, but after 15 years I cannot recall specific details such as times, places, names etc. With this limitation in mind I hope you will forgive me if the account seems somewhat disconnected. I hope that some of this material will be useful to you and wish you the best of luck in your efforts to document the part played by the Airborne on this very important day in our history.

I was a First Lieutenant in command of the light machine gun platoon of Headquarters Company, 2nd Battalion, 505th Parachute Infantry Regiment, of the 82nd Airborne Division. Company Commander was Capt. Bill Schmeeze, Battalion Commander was Lt. Col. Benjamin Vandervoort, Regimental Commander was Col. Wm. Ekman, Ass't Division Commander was Brig. General James Gavin, Division Commander was Major General Mathew Ridgeway.

Some 24 hours prior to the jump we were assembled at our takeoff airdrome near Leicester, England. For several months we had been training for this mission and all of us knew every terrain characteristic of the country around our scheduled drop zone in France, near a place called St. Sauveur Le Vicomte. However just a day or two prior to the invasion word came through that it was necessary to change our entire objective due to the fact that the Germans had apparently gotten wind of the location of the drop zone and had prepared it for the attack. Our objective was changed to a place called St. Mere Eglise and we had little or no time to become familiar with the new location.

We took off about 11 PM on the night of June 5, 1944 and headed for France. We could see lots of enemy activity in the distance but the trip across the channel was uneventful for our flight. About 1 AM of June 6th we got the word to "stand up and hook up", and about ten minutes later the green light came on and we went out the door into the darkness below. As jumpmaster and the first one out of my plane I had to go back down the line of men in the plane prior to the jump and check each one for proper hook up of his static line. On returning I stood in the door ready to jump when the Corporal behind me tapped me on the shoulder and pointed to my own static line which I had failed to hook up. I quickly made the necessary hook up and turned and went out the door as the green light had come on in the meantime.

I landed flat on my back in a small orchard, completely exhausted and so bound up in equipment I could hardly move. About that time a figure appeared in the darkness and I couldn't decide if it was friend or foe. I got my pistol out and waited until he was about three feet from me. I had decided that I wasn't going to wait very long before I pulled the trigger, but that I would give him a split second to say the code word. I said "George" and he said "Washington" and we both sighed with relief. We picked up several more men as we walked toward the assembly point where I was finally able to get almost all of my men and their equipment together. Colonel Vandervoort instructed me to set my platoon up in a defensive position about one mile north and east of the town of St. Mere Eglise. There was no enemy activity in our area at this time although I could hear some firing in the distance.

I decided that the only way of reaching them was to go around on the flank and get up above them and throw grenades into the ditch at the places I could observe the tall grass moving. We were so pinned down by artillery fire that I was unable to find anyone to go with me, and I hadn't seen hide nor hare of my runner since our narrow escape earlier. Equipment was scattered all over and I found about ten ordinary ~~hand~~ fragmentation grenades and one Gammon grenade. The gammon grenade is a British invention primarily designed to knock out tanks. It was about the size of a soft ball and because of its power I chose this as my first grenade. From my position on the flank I waited until I saw the grass move. I scrambled up the side of an embankment ran across about 50 yards of open ground which brought me to a position right over the ditch in which the Germans were working their way into our main defenses. I got rid of the Gammon grenade and headed back to the protection of my ditch. I disappeared over the side just as a German raised up out of the ditch and fired at me with a machine pistol. I waited for a loud explosion that never came, my Gammon grenade misfired. Since they now knew where I was I was hesitant about going back. At about this moment a Lieutenant from the Airborne Engineers I believe came running up the road in a crouched position. He said he had three or four men with him and would like to help. We crawled up the embankment so I could show him what I was trying to do. As we cautiously poked our heads up over the top a machine gun cut loose from the German ditch, we both slid back down the embankment. When the firing stopped I got up but he didn't, so I rolled him over. He was shot right through the head.

I decided to give it another try as the Germans were getting in closer all the time which I could tell by the movement of the tall grass in the ditch which they occupied. I pulled the pins on two grenades and started across the open area. This time they went off just as I got back to the protection of my own position. The firing from their
